Can't decide where to sink your teeth in next? Well, these restaurants are definitely worth a visit this September.

Butchers Club Burgers

It hasn't officially opened but they've recently had a pre-opening party in Clarke Quay where guests spraypainted the concrete walls. And if that's reminding you a little of another gourmet burger joint, you're not the only one. Having said that, this place dishes out huge, fuss-free burgers with 30-day dry-aged patties and a slew of toppings like Gouda cheese, pulled pork, srirachi-fried meat and kimchi.

Chef's Table

Chef's Table

Pop-up restaurant maestro Chef Stephan Zoisl finally opens a standalone restaurant in the same shophouse where his cooking studio is located. If the name doesn't give you any hints, the small and unpretentious degustation-focused restaurant cooks up modern European food in front of a communal 12-seater table. Choose between three to eight courses of the season's freshest produce with dishes like fried pig's ears and the decadent Doughnut Pte Ltd, donuts fried in duck fat with duck confit, thyme, poached egg and braised shallots (psst, they only serve eight portions per night).

The Daily Roundup

As if The Working Capitol could be any more of a mecca for good food and cool concepts, this crepe and galette cafe opens. The pretty pastel-tinged and light wood space has all manners of Brittany-style sweet crepes and savory galettes with crowd-pleasers like the Nutella-inspired hazelnut crepe and a fresh Italian burrata galette with cherry vine tomatoes and pesto. But if you're just there for a quick afternoon pick-me-up there's also coffee and summery pre-bottled cocktails like spritzers and Aperols.

Fifth Quarter

Fifth Quarter

Slated to open sometime in September (if all goes well), this cured meats restaurant already has bragging rights being situated in Kampong Glam's swankiest new boutique hotel, Hotel Vagabond. Under the care of Chef Drew Nocente, formerly of W Singapore's Skirt, the menu (and photos) has already got us drooling, with a range of charcuterie-based and grilled dishes like Carabinero prawn with chorizo and potato, as well as lamb loin with pickles and kohlrabi.

Grain Traders

The folks of Kilo have certainly been busy with tons of hip events, chef collabs and a new space in Bali. This CBD cafe seems like the perfect solution for busy execs and corporate drones with its easy build-your-own bowls concept. Whether you eat in the utilitarian-chic space in the new and green office building CapitaGreen or take the food away, look forward to bagels with guac and bacon and bowls filled with striploin, quinoa, brown rice, veggies and hearty sauces.

Wagokoro by Hide Yamamoto

Wagokoro by Hide Yamamoto

Japanese chef extraordinaire Hide Yamamoto stretches his reach out of Marina Bay into another waterside location. Taking over Kappo Yorito, he's kept the Kyoto Kappo cuisine that serves kaiseki courses of fresh, seasonal produce. That means you'll get both raw and cooked dishes served course-by-course, including must-haves like the duck consomme oden and homemade soba. So it may look like a seriously zen space, but the prices (from $80) that come with the meal probably means that you'll have to keep this place reserved for special occasions.
